sued an old beau for forcibly kissing her, and has demanded twenty thousand dollars damages. In a land where kisses can be had for nothing by any man who is worthy of them this seems a high valuation, although the trial may develop some justification for the lady's claim. It may be that the man had been eating onions. If the man had been eating onions. If he had the sum claimed is entirely too small. Or he may have been an habitual smoker or drinker, which would have made the case still more serious. In the absence of any detailed evidence it is possible to imagine only one of two reasons for the magnitude of the lady's claim-either the man was personally obnoxious or he made a grave mistake in taking only one kiss. A man who values such a blessing says a lady contributor of the enough to steal it, yet is satisfied with
